

"L" MOTORMAN KILLED IN FIRE

Collision Starts Fatal Blaze on Third Avenue Road and All
Trains Are Blocked for Several Hours.

STREET FIRE STOPS SECOND AVENUE LINE.

Power Shut Off After Narrow Escapes from Third Rail and Trains—Firemen Fight Blaze
from Elevated Tracks.

Two fires in different sections of the city, and coming a few hours apart, caused a tie-up of all traffic on the Third and Second Avenue elevated roads, roasted one man, the motorman of a Third Avenue train, to death; damaged the Third Avenue elevated structure to the extent of many thousands of dollars, burned up two elevated cars, caused a panic among a great crowd of passengers and placed the lives of a score of firemen in danger.

The first fire occurred at One Hundred and Twelfth street and Third Avenue, following a collision on the "L" road. A train of eight cars, in charge of Motorman Irving Lamphere, was being run down the center tracks, which extend from Fifty-ninth street to Harlem. These tracks are used for the storage of cars which are in use only during the rush hours.

Third Rail Starting Blaze.

Lamphere was taking the train from Ninety-eighth street. From One Hundred and Twelfth street to One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street the middle track was already filled with stored cars, but as they bore no lights Lamphere was unaware of the fact. Although he had intended to stop at One Hundred and Twelfth street, he was going at a rapid rate and apparently did not realize how close he was to the stored cars until it was too late.

Almost at the instant that the black bulk of the stationary cars loomed up before him his train plunged into them. So violent was the impact that the first car struck was flung into the air. Then it toppled over sideways to the south-bound track, where it fell upon the third rail and caught fire, sending up long sheets of blue flame and a shower of electric sparks that shot into the night like a fountain.

In the second car from the rear of the stored train was Andrew Conroy, a sweeper. He was thrown from his seat by the shock, but recovered himself in time to hear the approach of a south-bound train, which had left One Hundred and Sixteenth street a few minutes before. Catching up his lantern, Conroy ran out and along the track, but M. C. Dexter, motorman of the oncoming train, had been warned by the flames and stopped about one hundred feet from the wreck.

About fifty passengers were in Dexter's train, and the sudden application of the emergency brake sent them tumbling over one another. By this time Policeman Lawlor, who was in Third Avenue, had sent in a fire alarm, and in a few minutes Battalion Chiefs Doherty and Short had arrived with two truck companies and three engines. Ladders were raised to the elevated structure, but the firemen hardly dared take a step because of the third rail. A telephone message was then sent to the power-house in Ninety-eighth street to have the power shut off, and this was done.

Cascades of Molten Lead.

Then the passengers of the south-bound train stepped out and picked their way along the plank walk to One Hundred and Sixteenth street, whence employees had been sent to guide them. Those who were doing so the electric power was turned on again, and for the space of almost a block cascades of what looked like molten lead spouted into the air. Another message was sent to the power-house, and this time the electricity was shut off for good.

Hardly had the first fire been got under control than the second fire started in the five-story building at No. 20 Pearl street. This house is on the line of the South Ferry trains.

So fierce was this fire that the firemen were ordered on the elevated road. No effort was made to shut off the electricity on the third rail, and standing near it with a dozen hoses in their hands the firemen were in danger of death from shock every instant.

Arriving on the scene, Fire Chief Croker ordered a second alarm sounded. When the fire was again under control Chief Croker estimated that the loss could be about $25,000. Traffic on the Second Avenue line was suspended for two hours.

THIRD AVE. FIGHT ENDS IN A RIOT

There was a hot time in the vicinity of No. 10 Third Avenue when Joseph Kelly, seventeen years old, got into a fight with an Italian named Giuseppe, a shoemaker, who runs a shop in the basement at that number, and was stabbed in the abdomen.

William J. Roach went to Kelly's assistance. Then one Donato, a bootblack, took sides with his countryman and hit Roach on the head with a monkey wrench. The shoemaker and the bootblack were driven into the basement by a crowd of citizens, who took a hand, and then barricaded themselves behind the locked doors.

Man, Who Sits on Him Until Feet Are Tied.

An unidentified goat wandered down from Weehawken to-day and gave Hoboken a crowded hour. The casualties were numerous, among them being the severe injury of a valuable horse. The goat is in the pound without a scratch on him.

In passing from Weehawken to Hoboken the goat utilized the Willow avenue viaduct, but his actions did not indicate it. He might, from the way he cut up, have travelled in on a brewery wagon or a tank car.

Fourteenth street looked like a place better than home to the goat. He wandered into that thoroughfare, butted a cigar store Indian through a plate glass window and took up his station as guardian of the neighborhood at No. 63.

Tony Esposito, the well known contractor, has an office in the building at No. 63 Fourteenth street. It is the talk of the neighborhood how skillfully he drives his high-priced trotter through the street approaching his office, swings up to the curb and makes an emergency stop. He made one of those stops to-day.

The goat failed to see the beauty of it. He thought it was a challenge to fight. Before Esposito got out of the buggy the goat had butted the horse twice. As soon as Esposito reached the sidewalk the goat gathered for a long spring and launched himself straight at the ribs of the horse.

There was a sound like smacking an empty barrel with a baseball bat. The thoroughly terrified horse leaped halfway across the street and then started out to break records.

At Bloomfield street he took to the sidewalk, breaking off lamp-posts, demolishing displays in front of stores, scaring pedestrians and destroying the carriage at every jump. Policeman Doherty stopped him after her had run seven blocks and led him to a veterinary who says that he despairs of saving the animal's life.

Goat Scattered the Crowd.
While Esposito's horse was running away, ood. The goat was chasing him. He succeeded in reaching a stairway, followed by the goat and a crowd. The goat turned on the crowd and scattered it.

Boys came from every direction only to be bowled over by the playful visitor from Weehawken. Young women on their way to the ferry were warned off the block by solicitous citizens.

The riot was as chaotic as a greased pig until Policeman Eckhardt, who weighs 200 pounds, fell on him. Eckhardt lay on the goat until volunteers got ropes and tied the four legs of the disturber one to another. Afterward the animal was thrown into a wagon and carted to the pound.

FELL FROM "L" AND FRACTURED SKULL

Man Found in Gutter Near Station Stairway at One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street and Eighth Avenue.

A man supposed to be Peter Peterson, a Swedish tailor, was picked up in an unconscious condition from the gutter beside the elevated railroad station at One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street and Eighth Avenue to-day.

He is supposed to have dropped from a curve in the stairway about twenty feet above the spot where his body was found. He had been drinking.

Pedestrians called the attention of Policeman Drucker, of the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street station, to the unconscious form of the man in the gutter, and Drucker called an ambulance from the J. Hood Wright Hospital. The man was taken there and died of a fractured skull in about two hours. He did not regain consciousness before death.

In his pockets was found a letter written in Swedish and directed on the envelope, "Peter Peterson." It was unsigned and there was no address. He also had a card of Wachtel & Reich, tailors, No. 25 Whitehall street.
